

Are you concerned that standardized testing is overwhelming our students and overburdening our schools?

Texans Advocating for Meaningful Student Assessment, or TAMSA, is a statewide grassroots organization comprised of parents and other community members with a vision for a strong accountability system for our schools and student assessments that are meaningful. Concerned with the overemphasis on high stakes STAAR tests and the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars for tests that should be going to the classroom, TAMSA supports the use of nationally normed tests, supplemented with state tests where appropriate.

SPEAKERS TAMSA: Susan Kellner, Karen Peck

If you are concerned with what you see happening in our children's classroom: too much time spent on standardized tests; too little time left for exploring and creating, then please attend this special event to hear from TAMSA members on how you can advocate in Austin for our children and their schools.

Fort Bend ISD, Lamar CISD, and Stafford MSD joined with more than 800 Texas public school districts to approve a resolution that calls for a scaling back of standardized testing.
